

LRW PROGRAM DESIGN AND FACULTY STATUS

For the 2002-03 Academic Year (prepared December 2002)

The original version of this chart, and a full explanation, can be found in Jan M. Levine, Legal Research and Writing: What Schools Are Doing, and Who is Doing the Teaching, 7 Scribes J. Leg. Writing 51 (1998-2000). Data on voting rights was taken from Sue Liemer, _____, XXXX (2002). The latest version of this chart can be found at <http://www.alwd.org>, the website of the Association of Legal Writing Directors.

Hybrid programs are listed in the “Full-Time LRW Professors” category if the program employs a program director (or two co-directors) and two or more additional full-time professors of legal writing. The numbers of instructional staff are listed if that information was available. In the voting rights entries for directors and full-time legal writing professors, “app’ts” refers to faculty appointments, “P” refers to promotion, and “T” refers to tenure. Tenured faculty can vote on all matters. Tenure-track faculty can vote on all matters, except they cannot vote on promotion until they achieve the rank to be awarded by such a promotion, and cannot vote on tenure until awarded tenure. Adjuncts and students are presumed to not have voting rights.

Blue (and a ★ by the school’s name) is used to make it easy to find LRW professionals who are “tenured,” “tenure-track,” “tenured (clinical),” “tenure-track (clinical),” “tenured (LRW),” “tenured (librarian),” or “tenure-track (librarian);” some of these faculty are teaching in a program that is “directorless.” These categorizations mean the LRW professors have, or are eligible for, lifetime job security, on a tenure-track. These professors were hired and tenured as legal writing teachers, not as teachers of doctrinal courses (some are on separate tenure tracks). Entries containing the word “tenure” in black mean the professors consider themselves to be doctrinal law teachers; they were not hired or tenured as teachers of legal writing.

Green (and a ★ by the school’s name) is used to show directors and full-time professors who are in “contract - 405(c)” positions. That means the position is in compliance with ABA Accreditation Standard 405(c), where the professor is eligible to receive a long-term contract, usually of three or more years, and has a role in faculty governance reasonably similar to that of the tenured faculty (these positions do not lead to lifetime job security). Professors in these positions may be eligible for long-term contracts after a series of shorter appointments.
